Curata enables the Economic Development Council of Western Massachusetts to deliver the leading business development news and social media resource

The Situation
How does a private, non-profit corporation establish itself as the region’s premiere, go-to resource for business development? That was the challenge facing the Economic Development Council of Western Massachusetts (EDC), charged with delivering the services and business resources that enable companies to thrive in Western Massachusetts. With a mission to stimulate and facilitate a vigorous regional economy, encouraging and sustaining capital investment and quality job growth, the EDC needs to stay top of mind for local companies and those interested in entering the region.

The Challenge
While the organization’s blog had been up for some time, it had gained little traction. “We didn’t have the time to consistently produce blog posts,” explains Michael J. Graney, Senior Vice President of Business Development for the EDC.

Instead the EDC was relying on a daily email newsletter to share timely news. Unfortunately, Graney and his small staff were spending nearly two hours per day reading online newspapers to populate their newsletter. To make matters worse, they lacked a Web site archive for these news clippings. “We were spending a lot of time for little return,” continues Graney.

The Solution
With Curata, EDC can efficiently gather and disseminate news to companies in the region and beyond. Once Curata identifies a relevant article, the engine automatically analyzes the content and extracts key information for the EDC team. EDC employees can then review and curate hundreds of articles and topics within minutes. After this, Curata automatically publishes the content on thousands of pages on the EDC Web site. “In addition to saving us a tremendous amount of time and effort, Curata actually helps us improve over time to find ever more relevant stories and information,” says Graney.

In fact, Graney finds the Curata solution empowers the EDC to comb the Web for information about niche markets. “The Curata solution is the perfect fit for any organization needing to find and present information specific to their field of expertise. It makes it easy to find information of interest, which is nearly impossible to consistently do on your own over time. In addition, it cross-references and stores all information in archival formats so you can build a valuable, reusable repository,” continues Graney.

The Results
Expanding Exposure While Saving Time
Whereas it previously took Graney’s staff 90 minutes to gather and curate articles, it now takes 15 minutes per day. The EDC is easily able to deliver the information and news the business community is seeking – without having to worry about continually coming up with germane topics. “In addition to augmenting our existing content, HiveFire expands exposure to our blog posts,” explains Graney.

Gaining a competitive edge
The Curata solution provides the EDC with the competitive edge it was hoping to gain. “Being perceived as the place to go for business news is consistent with our mission. It reflects well on us that we’re on top of the latest news and using cutting-edge technology,” concludes Graney.

By establishing itself as the premiere source of business news, the EDC is increasing the amount of traffic to its site. In addition to expanding its reach, the EDC is able to drive additional revenues by displaying advertisements on its site.

Tapping into unexpected benefits
While the EDC is thrilled with the results to date, it’s eager to take advantage of additional Curata features. With Curata, the organization can send targeted messages to its mailing list and tie its news feed into social-networking sites including LinkedIn, Twitter, and Facebook. “While Curata is predominantly a communications tool, it’s also a useful marketing tool. These capabilities will help distinguish us in the industry, and reinforce our expertise,” concludes Graney.
